

The Celts were a very powerful ancient civilisation or group of people like the Romans, Egyptian, or others. They were feared warriors and they spread across much of Europe.

The Romans called the Celts - Celti (Latin)
The Greeks called the Celts - Keltoi

By 51 BC Julius Caesar, an important Roman Emperor, had conquered them. The Celtic period was replaced everywhere as Latin took over.

In the year 390 BC they attacked the city of Rome causing much damage and killing many people.

It is thought that the Celts arrived in Ireland in about 1200BC.

The influence of the Celts and the Celtic tradition can still be seen today in the language, art and culture of several parts of Britain and Europe including:

- Scotland
- Isle of Man
- Wales
- Cornwall
- Brittany/ France